Local Affairs.

Our patrons who are aware of the situation in which we are placed will not be surprised that we appear late this evening. We have had much to contend against, and expect that during this, our first week, we shall make our daily appearance late in the afternoon. Our friends will overlook the delay, as we will do better hereafter.

Last night an encampment of Rechabites was opened in this city, by Dr. W. B. Magruder, who had been deputized by the Grand Encampment of Virginia, to officiate on the occasion. It is called "Jehu Encampment," and the following is a list of its officers. Shepherd, S. S. Briggs; Tribune, A. V. Cross; Senior Dictator, S. T. Shugert; Junior Dictator, J. B. Magill; Recorder W. W. Tucker; Q. W. G. Brook.

Sontag's concert last night was well attended, though the audience was not so large as at her first appearance.

This morning the markets were supplied with provisions of all sorts; but the prices for almost every thing were very high. Poultry commanding good prices; the smallest turkeys were selling for 87 cents, while the largest as much as three dollars.

We learn that a Mr. Holtzclaw was yesterday found dead in a little stream in the western part of the city. We presume that an inquest will be or has been held over the body and the immediate cause of his death will be made known. The deceased leaves a wife and several children.

Michael Colbert was arrested this morning by officer P. B. Bell and taken before J. H. Goddard, esq., charged with forging the names of Thomas Eckhardt, Mrs. Gen. Jones, Wm. Peterson, T. B. Entwistle, E. N. Stratton, Capt. G. A. Schwarzman, E. King, David Kurtz, R. Burce, Capt. B. F. Sands, and others, to a petition for a license to sell liquors; $2,000 bail was demanded in each case, but the prisoner being unable to find it was committed to jail.

The Criminal Court was engaged this morning with the trial of Joseph Court enay, indicted for stealing a saddle, the property of the Secretary of the Navy. The Circuit Court has adjourned.

The following cases were disposed of at the central guard-house this morning: Tom Lemmon, negro, paid costs and was discharged. Isaiah Wormly, (negro), Ann Carlio, Susan Mattingly, and Patrick Manix, for being drunk and disorderly, were sent to the work-house; Georgiana Lawson, and Marian Boswell, brought in for fighting; gave security to keep the peace.

Mortality in Texas.
The Galveston News has the following paragraphs upon the health of some of the emigrants to the State:
It is reported that Mr. Flournoy, who came passenger by the steamship Texas on her last trip from New Orleans, and proceeded with his negroes to Port Lavaca, lost some eight or ten of them directly after landing at Lavaca. It is stated that they died of cholera.

We recently published a communication from our fellow citizen, Mr. John Dean, stating that several of his friends from Alabama, with a large number of negroes, were about moving into Texas. Mr. Dean has just received information of the arrival in Polk county of some of these families, who have been severely attacked with the cholera. The heads of the families are Hamlin H. Lewis, a brother of Dixon H. Lewis; Robert Scott, brother-in-law of Hamlin H. Lewis; Jno. E. Scott, nephew of R. Scott; and Mr. Snow, all from Lowndes county, Ala., together with the negroes of the widow of Dixon H. Lewis—the negroes in all numbering some 300 or 400. A letter to Mr. Dean, dated Cold Springs, Dec. 2d, says: "One of the Alabama company, Mr. Snow, has died of the cholera, together with eight or ten of his negroes." Mr. Dean is also informed from other sources that Mr. Hamlin H. Lewis, Mr. Robert Scott and Mr. John E. Scott have also died of the same disease, together with some forty or fifty negroes belonging to Mr. Hamlin H. Lewis, Mrs. Dixon H. Lewis and Mr. Scott.

Dr. Whitehead writes to the editor of the News, denying that the disease was cholera, but asserting that it was severe diarrhoea in which opinion, he says Dr. Morgan coincides.

Chloroform and Robbery.
A robbery, through the use of chloroform, was recently effected on one of the steamboats on the Mississippi. It is thus referred to in the New Orleans Delta:

Mr. W. P. Morrell, a sober and respectable citizen of Arkansas, was on his way home, on the 8th inst., on board of the steamer Fanny Smith, having the sum of four thousand dollars, in bank notes, with him. On retiring to his berth at night, Mr. Morrell had the precaution to lock both doors of his state-room, and tie his money in a belt around his waist next to his skin. On waking in the morning, he perceived a stifling odor in the room which nearly suffocated him. He got up, and, on examining the door, found it was broken open. He next looked for his money; it was gone—both of his shirts having been cut open, and the belt emptied of its contents. This daring robbery was no doubt effected by chloroform.

THE THREE MAXIMS.
A Christmas Tale.

There was an emperor of Rome named Domitian, a good and wise prince, who suffered no offenders to escape. There was a high feast in this hall; the tables glittered with gold and silver, and groined with plenteous provision: his nobles feasted with him—

"And 'twas merry with all
In the King's great hall,
When his nobles and kinsmen, great and small,
Were keeping their Christmas holiday."
The porter in his lodge made his fire blaze brightly, and solaced himself with Christmas cheer; every now and then grumbling at his office, that kept him from the gaieties of the retainers' hall. The wind blew cold, the sleet fell quick, as the bell of the king's gate sounded heavy and dull. "Who comes now? grumbled the porter; 'a pretty night to turn out from fire and food. Why, the very bell itself finds it too cold to clank loud. Well, well—daty is duty, some say it's a pleasure—humph? Hilloa friend, who are you? what do you want, man?"

The traveller whom the porter thus addressed was a tall, weather-beaten man, with long white hair that fluttered from beneath his cap of furs, and whose figure naturally tall and robust, seemed taller and larger from the vast cloak of bearskins with which he was enveloped.

"I am a merchant from a far country," said the man; "many wonderful things do I bring to your emperor, if he will purchase of my valuables."
"Well, come in, come in, man," said the porter: "the king keeps his Christmas feast, and on this night all men may seek his presence. Will take some refreshment, good sir?"

"I am never hungry, nor thirsty, nor cold."
"I'm all—there—straight before you, good sir—the hall porter will usher you in—straight before," muttered the old porter as he returned to his fire and his supper. "Never hungry, thirsty, nor cold—what a good poor man he would make! Humph! he loses many a pleasure, though," continued the porter, as he closed the door of the lodge.

The strange merchant presented himself in the presence of the emperor.
"Who have we here," said Domitian, as the strange visitor made his obeisance.
"What seekest thou of me?"
"I bring many things from far countries. Will thou buy of my curiosities?"
"Let us see them," rejoined Domitian.
"I have three maxims of especial wisdom and excellence, my lord."
"Let us hear them."
"Nay, my lord, if thou hearest them, and likest not, then I have lost both my maxims and my money."
"And if I pay without hearing them, and they are useless, I lose my time and my money. What is the price?"

"A thousand florins, my lord."
"A thousand florins for that of the which I know not what it is," replied the King.
"My lord," rejoined the merchant, "if the maxims do not stand you in good stead, I will return the money."
"Be it so then; let us hear your maxims."
"The first my lord, is on this wise, Never begin anything until you have calculated what the end will be."
"I like your maxim much," said the king; "let it be recorded in the chronicles of the kingdom, inscribed on the walls and over the doors of my palaces and halls of justice, and interwoven on the borders of the linen of my table and chamber."
"The second, my lord, is, Never leave a highway for a by-way."
"I see dot the value of this maxim; but to the third."

"Never sleep in the house where the master is an old man, and the wife a young woman. These three maxims, if attended to, my lord, will stand you in good stead."
"We shall see," said the king; a year and a day for the trial of each; at the end of this time we will settle accounts."
"Good master," said the king's jester, "wilt sell thy chance of the florins for my fool's cap?"
"Wait, and see what the end will be," rejoined the merchant; "a year and a day hence I will return to see how my first maxim has fared. Farewell, my lord."

The year and a day were nearly elapsed, and yet the first maxim had not been clearly proved. Domitian remained severely just and the ill-intentioned of his nobles plotted his destruction in the hopes indulging their vices more freely under the rule of his successor. Many were the plots they concocted to put him to death, but all were foiled by his foresight and prudence.

"Every failure," said the conspirators at a midnight meeting, "brings danger nearer to ourselves."
"Even so, brothers, but this time we will not fail," said one of the number; "do ye not mind that I am the king's barber; every day he bares his throat to my razor; it is but one slash, and we are free; promise me the crown; in return for this I will give you freedom by the king's death, and free license during my reign."

"It is well spoken," cried all the conspirators; "the barber shall be our king."
On the next morning the barber entered the chamber of Domitian, and prepared to shave the king. The razor was stopped, the latter spread upon the royal chin, and the towel fastened round the royal breast. On the edge of the napkin were these words in letters of gold, "Never begin anything until you have calculated what the end will be."

The barber's eye fell on these words, they arrested his attention, he paused in his labors.
"What am I about to do?" thought he to himself, "to kill the king, to gain his crown? shall I not rather be slain miserably, and die amid unheard of tortures and infamy? whilst those that plot with me will turn against me, and make me their scape-goat."
"Be faithful, and fear not," replied the king.

"The merchant, my lord the king," said a servant of the chamber, who entered at that moment, followed by the old merchant.
"Thou art come at a good time, sir merchant; the first maxim has been proved; it has saved my life; it was worthy of its price."
"Even as I expected my lord—a year and a day hence expect me again."

"We will trust no more to a single hand," said one of the conspirators, when they met again, after the barbers repentance; this time we will all share."
"I propose," said one of the rebel lords, "an ambush on the road to Naples. Every year, on the day after Christmas, the king journeys thither; the by-roads near the city gates is the nearest road, peradventure he will go that way."

When the Christmas night was over, the king prepared to journey to Naples; a great company of nobles, knights, and men at arms, went with him. Not far from the city, he came to the place where the highway and by-path diverged.

"My lord," said an old noble, "the day is far spent, the sun sinks fast in the horizon; will not my lord turn by the by-path, as it is shorter than the high road?"
"Nay," said the king, "it's a year and a day since the merchants first maxim saved my life; now will I test the second admonition, 'Never leave a highway for a by-path,' but go part of ye by that path, and prepare for me in the city; I and the rest will pursue the highway."

Onward rode the knights and the soldiers by the by-path, and hastened towards the city, as they neared the ambush, the traitors sprang upon them, for they thought the king was among them. Every man slew his opponent, and there remained not one of the king's company, to bear the tidings to the king, but a youth, a little page, whom the conspirators did not remark during the attack.

At the city gates, the king found the merchant who had sold him his maxims.
"Halt, O king?" said he—the second maxim has been proved."
"How so?" replied the king.
"The company that rode by the by-path are slain every one of them save this little page, who is here to tell the sad tale."
"Is this so, good youth?"
"Alas my lord it is too true; from behind the trees they rushed upon our company as we rode lightly and merrily, and no one, save your poor page, lives to tell the tale."
"For a second time is my life saved by the maxim; let it be inscribed in gold, 'Never leave a highway for a by-way.'"
"For a year and a day, O king! fare thee well!"

"Art dreaming, sir barber?" exclaimed the king.
At the king's voice, the barber trembled exceedingly, he dropt the razor from his hand, and fell at his sovereign's feet.
"What means all this?"
"Oh, my lord," exclaimed the barber as he knelt at Domitian's feet, "this day was I to have killed thee; but I saw the maxim written on the napkin; I thought of the consequences, and now repent me of my wickedness. Mercy, my good lord, mercy!"
"A murrian on the old fool's maxim's!" grumbled the chief of the conspirators, when they discovered that the king had escaped their wicked design; "we are beaten out of every plot, and had best submit to his dominion."
"Nay," exclaimed a young and licentious noble, "there is luck in odd numbers, let us have one more trial—a sink or a swim."

"I care not if wo try once more," said the old rebel; "but come, who suggests a scheme?"
"I, and I, and I!" exclaimed several at once; but their schemes were pronounced futile.
"What say ye to this?" said the young man who had before spoken: "every year the king goes to the small village where his old nurse lives; there is but one house in the village where he can be lodged, let us bribe the master of the house, that he slay our tyrant while he sleeps."

The plan was approved by the rebel lords, the bribe offered and accepted by the old man, to whose house the king always came. The king came as usual to the village town, and to his old lodgings. As he entered the old man received him with humility and feigned delight, and a young damsel, not eighteen, attended at the door step. The king noticed the damsel, he arrested his steps, and called to the old man.

"Good father," asked he, "is yonder damsel your daughter, or thy niece?"
"Neither, my lord," replied the old man, "she is my newly married wife."
"Away, away," said the king to his chamberlain, "prepare me a bed in another house, for I will not sleep here to-night."
"Even as my lord wishes," rejoined the chamberlain; "but my lord knows there is no other house in this place fit for a king's residence, save this one; here everything is prepared, everything commodious."

"I have spoken," replied the king; "remain thou here; I will sleep elsewhere."
In the night, the old man and his wife arose, stole on tip-toe to the chamber which was prepared for the king, and where the chamberlain now slept in the royal bed; all was dark as they approached the bed, and plunged a dagger into the breast of the sleeping noble.

"It is done," said they; to bed, to bed." Early the next morning, the king's page knocked at the door of the humble abode where the king had passed the night.

"Why so early, good page?" asked the king.

"My lord, the old merchant waits thy rising; and even now strange news is come from the village."
The merchant seemed greatly elated, his eye glistened with joy, and his figure appeared dilated beyond its ordinary height. The messenger was pale and trembling, and staring aghast with fear.

"My lord, my good lord," exclaimed the palid messenger, "a horrible murder has been committed on your chamberlain; he lies dead in the royal bed."
"The third maxim is tried and proved," said the merchant.

"Give God the praise," said the king; "thy reward is earned; a robe of honor, and thrice thy bargained price; to the old man and his wife, immediate death."
